

"It don't mean a thing ...

... if it ain't got that swing"

Ein frischer Wind weht durch die altherwürdigen Gemäuer des ehemaligen "Ballhaus Femina", einem Hotspot der wilden 1920er-Jahre in Berlin, wie schon die Außenfassade im Stile der Neuen Sachlichkeit jener Zeit verrät. Neben dem Ballhaus beherbergte der stattliche Bau zudem die Texas Bar und den größten Tanz-Tee Berlins 1929, bevor Kapellen der Wehrmacht das Swing-freudige Publikum vertrieben. 1949 entstand im Keller das Künstlerlokal "Badewanne", welches rasch zu einer der bedeutenden Jazz-Stätten Berlins mutierte, auf deren Bühne auch der heutige Namensgeber performte: Duke Ellington. Ende der 1970er-Jahre traf man im "Dschungel" Rio Reiser, Nick Cave oder David Bowie & Iggy Pop, bevor die Berliner Finanzdirektion das Haus mit dem Sound der Schreibmaschinen in den Dornröschenschlaf entsandte.

A fresh breeze blows through the venerable walls of the former "Ballhaus Femina", a hotspot of the wild 1920s in Berlin, as the exterior facade in the style of the New Objectivity of the time reveals. In addition to the Ballhaus, the stately building also housed the Texas Bar and the largest "Tanztee" ballroom in Berlin in 1929, before bands of the Wehrmacht drove the swing-happy audience. In 1949, the artist's room "Badewanne" (Bathtub) was built in the cellar, which quickly became one of the most significant jazz sites in Berlin, on their stage today's namesake also performed: Duke Ellington. At the end of the 1970s, Rio Reiser, Nick Cave or David Bowie & Iggy Pop met in the "Dschungel" before the Berlin Financial Directorate sent the house to sleep with the sound of typewriters.
